

PROTHOMA RAI CHAUDHURI

Assistant Professor

Prothoma Rai Chaudhuri has a Ph D in political theory from the Department of International Relations, Jadavpur University. She has earlier published articles in edited books and journals including the Economic and Political Weekly, and the departmental journals of Jadavpur University and the University of Calcutta.

She has been teaching political thought/ political philosophy, Indian government and politics, comparative politics in the Department of Political Science, St Xavier's College, Calcutta since 2006.

The Crescent Has Its Own Stories is a volume edited by her which compiles and re-presents undergraduate students' research on medieval Indian society, culture, politics.

Prothoma has been involved in the recent times in interdisciplinary research and in understanding the nature of the divide that exists between academic and literary writing in postcolonial pedagogy. As a part of her ongoing work in this area, she has been writing fiction, most notably literary fiction, and has been published by numerous national and international magazines. Her writings have been nominated for international prizes as well, including the Pushcart Prize.